

We won't get fooled again

Clearly, President Bush has not gotten the message sent in November's midterm election. So maybe we need to send a message in language he better understands:

``Fool me once, shame on (pause)... shame on you (long pause).... If fooled, can't get fooled again."''

Stop the drumbeats for war with Iran. We've seen this dog-and-pony show before: selectively pulling out intelligence data he says corroborates his interpretations of what is going on in the Middle East.

Bush is merely rewriting the Iraq script with another ``enemy" playing the role of Saddam Hussein.

That behavior is what got us into this mess in the first place, and we won't be fooled again.

There is a viable plan out there that the president has ignored:

Implement the Iraq Study Group's recommendations, and let us try to recover from this horrible mess Bush has gotten us into.
