

Democrats without a message

It seems to me that until Democrats figure out how to convince the voting public that tax breaks and other subsidies for wealthy corporations and individuals are actually large spending programs that waste way more tax money than safety net services for the poor, they are going to continue to wear the "tax and spend" label. Republicans need to be labeled what they really are, the "don't tax and spend party." Democrats need to focus on the message that Republicans are squandering our national wealth on a rich but politically well-connected minority that is flooding campaign coffers with kickbacks.

Please pass this along to whomever is in charge of Democratic Party marketing because they are failing miserably in framing this argument in a way that holds Republicans responsible for the immense damage they are inflicting.
